LAUNCH A BARRAGE
TO STOP NOMINATION*Borah and Knox Try to Prevent Kansas Governor
From Being Named*NOW HAS 400 VOTES*Borah Attacks the Republican National Committee For Its Work in OhioBy George R. Holmes
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

CLEVELAND, Ohio, June 5.—In the face of Governor Alf M. Landon's seemingly inevitable selection as the Republican presidential nominee, his opponents laid down a barrage of criticism today, which indicated there is a different coalition among them, the object of which is:

"Stop Landon."

It is Landon against the field. Of that there is no doubt whatsoever. Today, a full week before the balloting, the Kansas Governor has by the most modest of estimates, approximately 400 votes on the first ballot, with an excellent possibility to make the majority of 501, before the tally clerks complete their tabulation.

But there will be no easy factor in some ways. The comparative ease with which the Kansan has glided within striking distance has only served to intensify opposition.

Governor Landon was under fire today from both the Borah and Knox camps.

Senator Borah had two barrels to his gun. He charged the Republican National Committee of improperly sending funds to defeat him in Ohio, where a favorite son, Robert A. Taft, son of the former President, won most of the delegates. Second, through his campaign manager, Carl G. Bachmann, former Republican whip of the House, he caused to be issued a statement branding Governor Landon as a friend of the New Deal.

On behalf of Colonel Knox, ex-Senator George H. Moses of New Hampshire declared himself unimpressed by the delegates of Governor Landon.

FARMERS TO REPLACE
TIMOTHY; RAIN LACKING*Many Will Replant With Soy Beans So As To Get A Crop*GRASSES NEED RAIN

Crops in this section are said to be suffering from the lack of rain and according to County Agent William F. Greenawalt, many of them are considering making preparations to substitute at least one crop which has assurance of a good yield.

Grasses in particular are suffering because of the dry weather. Clover is showing very little signs of growth and the timothy crop, unless there is rain in the very near future, will amount to nothing this Summer.

Realizing this, a number of the farmers in Bucks and nearby counties have started to plow under the timothy sod preparatory to replacing it with soy beans. The latter, it was stated this week by County Agent Greenawalt, have the same feeding value as alfalfa and they are equally as good as the timothy.

Harvesting of the soy beans, however, cannot take place until the forepart of September, when the farmers are very busy with other work. Timothy, on the other hand, usually is harvested July 1 and July 15.

Corn planted a few weeks ago is coming through fairly well, but even this is having a hard time because of the crust which has covered some of the fields since the heavy rains last week. Mr. Greenawalt pointed out that although there had been an abundance of rainfall last week, it penetrated the ground only a very short distance. The importance of breaking the crust on the fields was stressed by Mr. Greenawalt.

Not only are the grasses suffering because of the drought, but the grain crops will be very light. Wheat and winter barley, which have been in the ground for months, are practically at a standstill, and oats can make very little progress unless there is rain in the near future. Grasses sown this Spring will not amount to anything, said Mr. Greenawalt.

Speaking briefly about seed corn, Mr. Greenawalt said this week that the germination is inclined to be poor and as a result the farmers will be compelled to go a large amount of replanting.

Some farmers, he said, are complaining that the corn is not coming through, but this, it was pointed out, may be due to the crust over the fields and not because the grains failed to sprout.

Sub-soils seem to have an ample supply of moisture and at present, said Mr. Greenawalt, there is no danger of a water shortage, but it is the upper soil which seems to be suffering the most. Because of the good condition of the sub-soils, it has been stated, fruit and other trees are suffering very little.

RESOLUTION

The Board of Directors of the Bristol Public School District desires to place on record its appreciation of the services of the late lamented Laura C. Taylor, and its deep sense of her loss. By the death of Mrs. Taylor this Board is deprived of the services and active interest of one who was a most faithful member of the Board since 1921.

To the matters that fell to her duties both as Director and as Secretary, she gave that careful and earnest attention so characteristic of her. Her sterling qualities, which endeared her to all with whom she came in contact, cause her death to be felt by the members of this Board as a personal bereavement, and they sympathize deeply with the community at large and with her family, to whom they offer their tenderest condolence and earnestly invoke for them the support of higher consolation.

Resolved, That a copy of this minute be sent to the family and that it also be published in the Bristol Courier.

CORONER'S JURY FREES
NYSSSE OF ALL BLAME*Holds That Edgely Man Was Not Responsible for The Death of Frank Figura*RELEASED FROM BAIL

Herbert Nyssse, Edgely, was exonerated of all blame for the automobile accident which resulted in the death of Frank Figura, Penn's Manor, early on the morning of May 17th, by a coroner's jury which held an inquest here yesterday afternoon.

Nyssse was immediately taken before Justice of Peace James Guy and his release from custody asked for by Corporal Evans of the Highway Patrol. Nyssse was discharged.

The inquest yesterday afternoon was conducted by Bucks County Coroner Dr. H. Clayton Moyer, who was assisted by Deputy Coroner Dr. James P. Lawler. The coroner's jury comprised Evan Vandegrift, foreman; Clarence Guy, Harold Hunter, Ralph Ratcliffe, Alexander Dougherty and Martin Widemer. The inquest was held in the Municipal Building.

Corporal Evans was the first witness. He told the jury of receiving a call after the accident happened, and of interviewing Nyssse, who described the accident to him, stating that Figura had stepped out in front of him as he was driving along the Bristol Pike, near Morrisville, at about 30 or 35 miles per hour. It was early on the morning of May 17th. Nyssse brought the injured man to the Harriman Hospital.

Deputy Coroner Lawler described the man's injuries, stating that his neck had been broken and that this injury was sufficient to cause his death. He also suffered other injuries.

James M. McCloy, Trenton, N. J., who was a witness to the accident, driving along the Bristol Pike with his wife, told of how he saw a figure apparently stagger out from the side of the road. "I stopped my car and by the time I got out, Nyssse was out of his car. Nyssse asked me to go to the hospital with him and I said 'yes.' I considered that I should do that much for any motorist."

McCloy told of a bottle containing alleged liquor being taken from Figura.

Nyssse, himself, took the witness stand and told the jury how the accident occurred. He said that he was driving toward Bristol at about 30 or 35 miles per hour. "The car of Mr. McCloy was coming toward me and we both had our headlights on. Of course the lights from McCloy's car blinded me and I did not see the man until I had struck him. I took him to the Harriman Hospital."

The jury, after deliberating on the evidence, returned a verdict in favor of Nyssse, ruling that the accident was unavoidable, and exonerating him.

The accident occurred near the Warner sand plant as Nyssse was driving to Bristol.

Below is the Foreword in the Book
"GREAT FORTUNES AND HOW THEY WERE MADE"

Published in 1870

The physical industries of this world have two relations in them: one to the actor and one to the public. Honest business is more really a contribution to the public than it is to the manager of the business himself. Although it seems to the man, and generally to the community, that the active business man is a self-seeker, and although his motive may be self-aggrandizement, yet, in point of fact, no man ever manages a legitimate business in this life, that he is not doing a thousand-fold more for other men than he is trying to do even for himself. For in the economy of God's providence, every right and well organized business is a beneficence and not a selfishness. And not less so because the merchant, the mechanic, the publisher, the artist, think merely of their profit. They are in fact working more for others than they are for themselves.

Wires.*$155,000,000 for VeteransBy Arthur H. Wakelee
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

Harrisburg, June 5.—Payment of Federal adjusted compensation drafts to Pennsylvania's World War veterans, will total more than $155,000,000, the Department of Military Affairs estimated today. With payment of the adjusted service certificates ready to begin June 15th, the Federal Compensation Division of the Department, has been swamped with inquiries relative to applications. A total of $155,994,459.25 will be divided among every county in the state, Ralph Mahaffie, acting chief of the division said. Although the Division will not handle the distribution of these funds, since it is a Federal payment, Mahaffie said inquiries to his Department have been doubled since passage of the bill providing for payment in full of the certificates.

Mahaffie said that only $6,000,000 now remains of $50,000,000 made available for payment of State obligations to its veterans.

The estimated distribution included the following counties: Berks County, $3,743,388.14; Bucks County, $1,562,624.69.

Rests Comfortably After Operation

New York, June 5.—Sara Ann Davis, of Johnstown, Pa., nine year old heroine of one of the most unusual operations in medical history, was resting comfortably today in a Manhattan eye, ear and throat hospital, apparently none the worse for her experience.

The young patient, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred M. Davis, had a living nerve transplanted from her leg to her face. An operation for mastoids, performed when she was two years old, had paralyzed a portion of her face.

Dr. T. Pickle took the sensory nerve from the child's leg and spliced it like a rope into a deadened section of the lifeless nerve. This new method is used to restore emotional expression as well as muscular control.

"UNCLE DAN" BEARD
ALWAYS BOYS' FRIEND*"A Boy's Man" is Title That Has Been Applied
To Him*LOVER OF OUTDOORS

Uncle Daniel Beard, who is to be at the Boy Scout celebration to be held at Bowman's Hill this evening, has had a very interesting career.

"A boy's man," is a title that has been applied on many occasions to Daniel Carter Beard. His fame as an outdoors man and as a friend of boyhood extends beyond the bounds of his own country. Wherever there are boys they know of Dan Beard. They know that he, perhaps more than any other living man, has shown boys how to have real honest-to-goodness fun. He has been a leader in work among boys for many years, and he is still at it just as keenly and vigorously as ever. As a founder of the Boy Pioneers and the Sons of Daniel Boone many years ago, he was veritably a pioneer in pointing activities for boys, a fact which has been frequently recorded by Lord Robert Baden Powell, founder of the Boy Scout Movement, and many other leaders in work among boys.

The place Dan Beard holds in the estimation of the Boy Scouts of America was expressed in a citation adopted by the Sixteenth Annual Meeting of the National Council of that organization when, a Silver Buffalo, awarded by the Boy Scouts of America only for distinguished service to boyhood, was conferred upon Uncle Dan. The citation read:

"Daniel Carter Beard, author, artist, outdoorsman, pioneer of outdoor movement for boys as founder of Boy Pioneers and Sons of Daniel Boone, honorary vice president, national Scout commissioner, chairman National Court of Honor and charter member of the executive board of the Boy Scouts of America, whose prestige, wisdom and experience have been pillars in the structure of the organization."

Daniel Carter Beard was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, June 21, 1859. He spent his early life in that city and in Covington, Ky. He spent much of his boyhood in a country where the memory of Daniel Boone's exploits was common to every household. The woods, field and forests were Dan Beard's playground and before he had reached manhood he was a true Scout and knew how to live the life of the wilderness. He graduated as a civil engineer at 19 and engaged in map making. His skill as a draftsman was shown early. A chance visit brought him to New York and settled his vocation. He had specialized in sketches of animals and some of these attracted the attention of a magazine editor and led to the beginning of Mr. Beard's successful career as an illustrator of animals and wild life.

A little later he started writing and is known today as the author of many books for boys. He was the editor of Recreation Magazine in the years 1895 and 1896, and he is a former president of the Campfire Club of America. Mr. Beard, adjoining Mt. McKinley, is named for him.

He still maintains active work as an author and illustrator and each month there is a page in the magazine, Boys' Life, to delight thousands of boy readers. Mr. Beard was married to Beatrice Alice Jackson of Newtown, L. I., on August 15, 1894. They now live near Suffern, New York. For many years Uncle Dan was a resident of Flushing, New York, once a delightful country town but on to which urban conditions have now come with the opening of a new subway line. As he preferred to be out in his beloved country, he packed up and moved to a delightful situation at Suffern, N. Y., in the wild country of the Ramapo Hills.

REUNION TEN YEARS
HENCE PORTRAYED
FOR CLASS NIGHT*Amazing "Machine" Perfected
By One of Bristol High
Graduates Used*MOTHERS' ASS'N AWARD*Marjorie Snook Named The Winner in Essay Contest;
Prize, $10

One of the most unique Class Night presentations ever given by Bristol high school was enjoyed by a capacity audience in the high school auditorium last evening with the 73 members of the graduating class participating.

By means of an amazing "machine" perfected by "Professor" Fred Randall in the year 1946, the members of the graduating class of 1936, Bristol high school, were brought into reunion 10 years after commencement. From all walks of life, and from all corners of the globe, were those who were seniors in 1935-36 brought, and with a recounting of their happy days in Bristol high school kept the audience in high good humor.

"Professor" Randall was aided in the operation of his amazing device by Johnson Orr, a member of the class, and to say the young men and young women were spell-bound when they suddenly found themselves ushered into the presence of their class-mates of ten years previous is putting it mildly. Some appeared in costume, being suddenly called from carrying out of their particular vocations, and among them were: President of United States, farmer, baseball players, radio singers, Congressmen, French foreign legion member, journalist, artist, nurse, doctor, boxer, clerk, etc.

After all had assembled, the prophecy of 1936 having proved to have been true, the group sang their Class Night Song.

The Class Grumblers, namely, Mildred Smoyer, Marjorie Snook, Edward Napoli and Walter Fagan, were called upon to tell of the short-comings of the class of 1936. Lucille Montague, recalled the Class Optimist, for pleasure of the students and audience. A medley of popular songs was led by John Burris, a member of the faculty.

Howard Baker was in charge of the recording of the Class History; and Blanche Riggs recited the Class Poem which she had written. The last will and testament of the graduates was read by Oscar Booz; with the entire group then singing the class song.

The class advisors, Miss Estelle L. Webber, and Paul Brown, were remembered with gifts, the presentation being by Julius DeWitte, president of the class, who was also in charge of the distribution of humorous gifts to the graduates, with a few of the class members aiding. The list was read by Loretta Clay.

Announcement was made last evening of the winner of the Mothers' Association essay contest, which is conducted annually. The winner, Miss Marjorie Snook, was named by Mrs. Alfred McLaughlin, president of the Association. The prize is $10.

Mrs. McLaughlin also presented to the following, pins for two years' activity on the staff of "The Rambler," the school paper: Loretta Clay, Mildred Smoyer, Genevieve Cherrubini, Marjorie Snook, Phyllis Wischer, Johnson Orr, Eleanor Ridge, Walter Fagan, Howard Baker.

The final number of the evening was a group of songs by the graduates, with solo parts by Oscar Booz and Walter Fagan.

Class officers are: President, Julius DeWitte; vice-president, Howard Baker; secretary, Loretta Clay; treasurer, Oscar Booz.

The motto is "Always Lead and Never Follow," the colors, blue and silver; and the flower, the white rose.

TAXING WAR PROFITS

Although Washington reports that a system of automatically turning over war profits in case of another major conflict involving the United States may be proposed to the Senate as an amendment to the pending tax bill, it seems unlikely that that body will add further to present perplexities.

The Senate finance subcommittee on wartime taxes urges that they begin at the $1,600 level for married persons and at the $800 level for single persons, and that the credit for each dependent be lowered to $250. The normal tax would be raised to 10 per cent and the surtax, rising to 80 per cent on the portion of incomes over $50,000, would reach a maximum of 90 per cent. The corporation income tax would have a maximum rate of 77 per cent.

This proposal, drastic as it is, is less confiscatory than the plan of the Senate committee which investigated the munitions industry. This committee proposed that as soon as the United States became involved in war, all income over $10,000 be taxed 99 per cent. In rejecting this plan, the Senate finance subcommittee aimed at subjecting peace-time taxation, and as confiscating only all or most of the profits due to war.

Last year the House passed by a vote of 367 to 15 a war profits taxation bill. This bill would levy in time of war a tax of 100 per cent on excess profits, but excess profits are not defined. The President would have authority to fix prices and to commandeer factories and material resources. The proposal now advocated by the Senate finance subcommittee is in the nature of a substitute for the House bill.

SEEKING NEW VICTIMS

A trend away from higher gasoline taxes is noted by the American Petroleum Institute. While this is about ten years overdue, it would be welcome except for signs that the tax eaters are not abandoning their quest for more money than they took from the taxpayer last year or last month, or yesterday. They have merely decided that gasoline is now taxed all it will bear, hence a change of front is necessary.

Recently the New York Legislature reduced the tax one cent a gallon after July 1, bringing the State tax down to three cents. It is estimated motorists will have $15,000,000 annually.

In a special flood-relief session of the New Hampshire Legislature the inevitable gas-tax proposal was presented and promptly killed, while in Kentucky the lubricating oil tax of eight cents a gallon was cut to four and although the Kentuckians didn't modify their gasoline taxation, they memorialized Congress to drop Federal gas taxes.

The special session of the Pennsylvania General Assembly also has a calmly sleeping gasoline tax increase plan, sired by that Sterling Friend of the Common People, Governor Earle, before it to help finance relief, and all indications are that this will be dead before the session ends. This will not mean a reduction, but it will be stemming the hitherto persistent tide of schemes to take it out of the gasoline tanks.

Who remembers when "The economist" tells us—"Was enough to clinch the argument?"

"BLIND TO LOVE" by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER XIX

Lalla, her usually pale face flushed, her curls slipping from their pins, came to Jackson Carter who was sitting on the davenport with Mary.

"Jack, will you see that Sammie quits drinking for a while? He's got a bum stomach. He'll be awfully bad tomorrow. Really, he shouldn't drink at all. I'm scared, Jack."

Carter slipped his free arm around Lalla, drew her to the davenport beside him and Mary. "Now be a good sensible little girl and let ol' Sammie alone. He's all right."

"Really, though, he'll be sick—" "Well, all he's sick before morning!" Carter said, and the crowd joined in his loud laughter.

When the food finally arrived the little Conroy girl turned a curious green, didn't wait till morning to be very, very ill.

The waiters laid the table with great care. Before they had finished somebody spilled a bottle of claret all over the white cloth, and somebody else dribbled mayonnaise in the clean plates.

"Here's her turkey, and now she doesn't want it," Breen complained. "That's the trouble with those stenographers, they can't hold their liquor."

"You lay off the stenographers, will you?" Lalla cried sharply.

At the sound of her voice Samson roused himself. "What's that? What's the trouble, Lalla?"

"Oh, nothing. But I take exception to what Sid said about stenographers, that's all. Sid has a right to hold his tongue. Look at him, his legs won't hold him up. And I'm all right. And I take exception to what you're saying, Sid Breen, and I—"

Breen waved a glass in Samson's direction. "Salute! And to the ladies—"

Samson knocked the glass out of Breen's hand. It shattered to the table, whisky and broken glass settled amongst the dull pickles. "Anybody who insults my wife insults me!" he shouted.

"Now, boys, we're all pals," Jackson Carter said.

"Don't soft-soap me!" "Keep out of this, will you?"

"I can't stand it, Mary thought, dodging the tension that Al Pankhurst was trying to slip down the low-cut back of her dress. I won't stand it—I'll walk out on them—"

She thought of her coat—with one of the girls asleep on it this very minute. Not much chance of getting it, quietly.

Well, she could go without it. Very quietly she edged back toward the door.

As Mary's fingers closed on the door knob, she was conscious of it being turned from without.

me! He's sick, I tell you! There's nothing the matter with that girl except she's drunk—but Sammie's sick!"

Mary moved over to Samson's side. She didn't know what to do for him. She didn't really care what happened to him, or the Conroy girl, or anybody. She just wanted to get out of there, and be safe home in bed. But it gave her something to do, to stand there with her hand on Samson's arm, pretending she was helping Lalla.

Do hotels let you carry on this way? The Conroy girl's friend, crying at the top of her lungs, and all that swearing and shouting. . . . Suppose someone sent for the police? Suppose Breen and that boy actually punched each other, as they were threatening to? Breen had for that! . . . Just the one dim light in the hall. Everyone was in bed. Now, if she could only get up the stairs, into her room, without waking anyone . . .

Stealthily she slipped off her pumps, snaked up the stairs with them in her hand.

Tears of humiliation and self-pity stood in her eyes. . . . to think that she, Mary Shannon, should come to this . . .

It Margot was awake, she gave no sign. Breathing heavily, Mary shut the bedroom door behind her, leaned against it for a moment. Her knees were shaking. She was almost sick with relief. She thought, "I'm out of it. I got out, and nobody saw me . . ."

In the dark, with cold fingers that were all thumbs, she pulled off taken off his glasses, the boy had put his wife down, and was taking off his coat.

The door was pushed open violently, a boy shoved Mary aside, rushed past her into the room.

Lalla kept moaning under her breath: "Oh, what a mess! What a fine mess!"

Two taxi-drivers — or perhaps they were hotel employees — came finally and between them they got Samson into the elevator and downstairs.

Mary followed a little behind them, holding her head high, trying to look as if she wasn't there, and hating herself for it—thinking of herself, when poor Lalla was only thinking of Samson . . .

She felt people looking, felt her face, her ears, even her neck, getting red.

The doorman helped boost the unconscious man into the car. Mary got in last, sat on the little seat facing them.

Lalla looked terrible, with her hair all falling down, and her eyes staring and glassy.

Mary furtively arranged her own hair, pulled out her powderpuff. Lalla said: "We'd better drop you at your place first. Tell the driver."

"If you don't need me—"

CHAPTER XX

Lord, she must have been crazy! Why, why, why did she go in the first place? Lalla had practically told her what to expect, though of course even poor Lalla hadn't any idea how rough it was going to be. And that young Mr. Conroy . . .

suppose he made trouble? Why did he say he could have them all put in jail? Even if Sid Breen and his wife . . .

If a girl is under-age—that Conroy girl looked about 16 . . .

Oh, but he wouldn't do that! A big scandal like that wouldn't help. . . . Could they all be held for witnesses? And their names be printed in the papers, where Ma and Pa . . .

She sat up in bed, shook her head violently.

I'm letting my imagination run away with me, she thought. I'm so scared I'm going crazy! Nobody else is worrying, I'll bet! I'm making it out a hundred times worse than it is. It was simply a drunken party, where a few people had a little too much, and naturally they did a few things they wouldn't have if they hadn't been drinking, and if that little Conroy girl came, whose fault was it but her own? Nobody asked her. She was a cheap, common little thing. She started it. If her husband thought so much of her why didn't he keep her home where she belonged . . .

The first cable car rattled by. I must stop worrying, and go to sleep. I won't be good for anything in the morning!

But she was still wide-awake when Margot's alarm clock went off at 7:30.

Samson was late. Ten o'clock, and no sign of him. Well, Mary didn't worry over that, especially for he was often that late. Still, he might telephone. Lalla, at least, should know she'd be a little anxious, after last night.

Last night . . . no use thinking about that now. Whatever had happened, had happened.

She put a fresh sheet of paper in her typewriter. This would be a good time to get caught up on that routine typing.

Why didn't Lalla telephone? Probably sleeping it off. . . . Nothing to worry about, really.

She spaced the sheet a little more accurately, typed in the date.

The door opened. Ethelyn Piper's carefully waved head appeared in the crack. Her lips moved soundlessly: "Is your chief in?"

"No—nobody's here. What's new, anything?"

"My dear, I had to get out! SHE'S in the office. . . ."

"Who?—I can't hear!"

Ethelyn came in, closed the door carefully behind her.

"I don't want to shout. My office is just across the hall, please remember! It's that frightful woman—Mrs. Odoree Sprague Spengen—the one that pursues the chief—"

"Oh, the beautiful divorcee!"

"Divorcee! I wouldn't say beautiful, exactly. My dear she's been waiting twenty minutes, and I don't DARE tell the chief, I don't DARE! And she's ready to break the door down and get in over my dead body."

Once more she heard the siren on the ambulance, saw the tall white povering sweetness of flowers that are beginning to droop, saw Aunt Willie dignified and young again in death. . . .

Things do happen! They do! They do!

If she'd just taken Margot's advice, and stayed away from Lalla and her bushwhacking friends! Leave a perfectly good date with a regular person, like Holden, and go out on a . . .

Well, it might have been worse. But it was bad enough, as Margot had indicated when she asked a few pointed questions this morning.

Mary looked at the clock. Almost eleven. A stack of mail unopened. Samson was officer about mail. Not like Bennet who had always been glad to have her open and sort it. Samson seemed to resent her touching it, so she'd given it up, let it lie on the desk until he came.

People telephoned, asked for him. Two wires came.

Shortly before noon she gathered courage, telephoned to the hotel. Mr. Samson was not in. Neither was Mrs. Samson.

At one o'clock she tried again. This time she said, "I'm Mr. Samson's secretary. It's really important. Do you know where I could get him?"

There was a long delay. Then a man's voice. "Mr. Samson was moved to Trinity hospital early this morning. His wife went with him. You might telephone the hospital."

Her fingers were so clammy and shaky she dialed the wrong number twice. Finally she got the hospital, then the second floor desk.

Lalla came to the telephone. Her voice sounded strained. She said: "Sammie says you'd better close the office. Put a will be back soon, or something on the door, and come here as soon as you can. He's awfully sick, and there's the devil to pay."

"Oh—I'm so sorry. . . . You mean, trouble—about last night?"

"Yes, I do. Get out here as soon as you can."

She had to change cars twice. It seemed an endless ride. Until she was actually walking up to the hospital, and wondering which of the many entrances was the right one, it didn't occur to her that she might have taken a taxi.

A nurse tapped on a closed door. In a moment she came out with Lalla. They closed the door carefully behind them.

Lalla wore her brown tailored suit, with a new white pique hat at the smartest angle. She'd even screwed in her big pearl earrings, and made up her eyes. But in spite of it all she looked worn and old.

"We're in for it. Sid Breen phoned me at six o'clock this morning. If I haven't had a night of it, what with Sammie sick as a dog, and Breen waking me out of my first sound sleep—"

"Lalla—TELL me—"

"Oh, it's that Conroy girl. Breen says it's blackmail. They framed the whole thing. That good for nothing husband of hers is out of work—never did work, I guess—and they just thought it would be easy money. Breen's daughter has just announced her engagement—I really think he'll have to pay up and keep it out of the papers—but he swears he won't!"

"Out of the papers—Lalla, they wouldn't—I mean they couldn't really do anything—to us, I mean! We were just there! We didn't do anything—"

"Oh, no! All we did was contribute to the delinquency of a minor—and a few other trifles, like alienating the affections of married men, and—" to do a good deed something like this happens."

"I'd just die. My mother would simply never get over it. I never could hold up my head again. My mother—"

"Oh, nonsense. That's nothing. But you may lose your job—and so will Sammie. He's not in too good now, and if this comes out—"

"I can't face it—I just can't—I—"

"Don't be silly. Look at me. I'd hate to tell you what I'm facing. Oh, well! And Sammie—poor old Sammie—he's the real goat. He's awfully bad, too. Really I'm so worried."

The nurse opened the door, rustled over to them. "Mr. Samson is asking for you, Mrs. Samson."

Lalla dabbed at her eyes. "I've certainly demonstrated that this is waterproof mascara. Well—I'll have to go to him. Oh, yes, he told me to tell you that you were not to give out any information until you positively had to, and whatever you do—DON'T tell his mother where he is."

"Say you don't know. Say anything, but DON'T tell her. He was awfully worried because the hotel told you the hospital. I had to get the house physician early this morning and he sent him here, that's how they know . . . go, I wish I knew how sick he is. Good-bye, kid. Keep your mouth shut, and leave the worrying to an expert—"

The nurse opened the door, motioned Lalla to enter.

Mary was alone in the long, empty hospital corridor.

All afternoon the telephone rang. "Mr. Samson in? When will he be in? But I must see him! Then connect me with someone who's taking his place—"

It wasn't right. She ought to give them some information. She ought to answer the wires that lay piled on his desk. But Samson had said not to. He was the manager, she was just the stenographer. It wasn't her affair. She had troubles enough of her own.

Troubles . . . head down on the desk, covered her aching eyes.

This is what you get for trying to start something. Never satisfied. First, she wanted a love affair. Well, she got it. Used to lie awake nights wishing she could do something wonderful for Jamie. She'd have died for him . . . yes, and he'd have let her . . .

Then she wished someone would fall for her the way she had for Jamie. And instead of that making her happy, Holden just made her miserable, aggravated her, brought out the worst in her . . .

But that was nothing—nothing to this! It was all right for Lalla to say it didn't matter if it came out in the papers. Lalla didn't know anybody here. She didn't have any mother and father . . .

Oh, darn the telephone! "Hello! This is Mrs. Samson." "Hello!"

"This is Mrs. Samson." The querulous, high-pitched voice came over the wire, "and I must know where my son is. He's sick, and they pretend not to know where he is. They admit he's sick, but they won't tell his own mother what's become of him. You must tell me, at once, do you hear?"

"I don't know," Mary lied, not too convincingly. "I telephoned the hotel about it, but they wouldn't tell me. Did you say you were his mother?"

"Yes, I did. And they told me I might get the information from you. I don't like that kind of impudence. It isn't right I should have to be asking you, but I am. I ask you once and for all, where is my boy?"

"Mrs. Samson, I—I really can't tell you—"

"Oh, yes, you can, young lady. I know. What's more, they admitted at the hotel that you went to the hospital with him. Now, what have you to say to THAT?"

"Why, I don't understand. I—I—"

"Oh, don't lie to me. I know. They told me. Do you think I'm crazy? Do you think I don't know why my son has hardly been to see me? My own boy! Because of you—you—"

Arrange Week's Calendar

Harrisburg, June 5—A full calendar was being set up today in preparation of the sixth week of the Special Session of the Legislature, starting Monday night.

The Republican National Convention was expected to take the spotlight of attention away from the session, and a quiet Legislature was anticipated by leaders of both Houses. Work on bills before them was to continue, however, and a public hearing on the corporate's net income tax bill listed for next Tuesday night occupied the place of importance in the Senate.

Risk Lives to Stop Blaze

Ardmore, June 5—Braving the danger of high tension wires, volunteer firemen today extinguished a blaze that damaged the electric power sub-station of the Philadelphia & Western Rail way Company at Beechwood, near here. For some reason, firemen said, high tension wires leading into the building were not shut off when the fire began, and they became a menace.

The Twin Model S-K Oil Burner

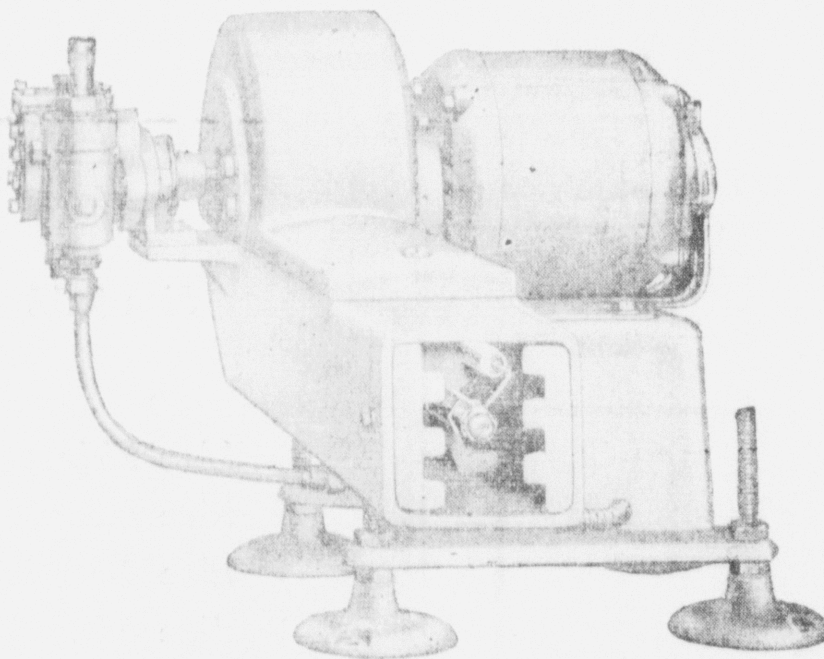

FINGER DIFFUSERS

—AND—

TWIN-FANS

Twin-Fans deliver converging airstreams through finger diffusers at an angle to the oil spray that gives greater turbulence to the mixture of air and oil.

This results in combustion efficiency considerably in excess of what can be accomplished with a single fan unit.

"RIGHT TO BE SELF-SUPPORTING" URGED AS PLATFORM PLEDGE

Sentinels of the Republic
Submit Proposed Planks
to Both Major Parties

"Restoration to the millions of unemployed of their inalienable right to be self-supporting," is urged as a plank for both major parties in a series of platform recommendations made public today by Raymond Pitcairn, National Chairman, Sentinels of the Republic.

Copies of the Sentinels' recommendations have been sent to the Chairmen of both the Republican and the Democratic National Committees by Mr. Pitcairn, who announced that they will be presented at the two National Conventions to be held this month.

The recovery on which self-supporting employment must depend, the Sentinels' recommendations explain, involves "a withdrawal of the Federal Government from private business," and "the expenditure of public funds by contracts awarded to the lowest bidder."

To this end also, a sound currency and a balanced budget are urged.

"A managed currency," explains the report, "is compatible only with a managed people. It discourages all long-range individual enterprise, menaces the savings and insurance of our people, and jeopardizes the investments of our charitable and educational institutions."

"It is a long step toward regimentation and dictatorship."

"An essential need is to balance the National Budget. We advocate an honest system of governmental accounting excluding the deceptive devices of supplementary and extraordinary budgets. We favor the simplification of tax statutes so that the people generally will know the extent of taxation. Taxation, however disguised as indirect, places a burden on all the people."

A return to "the American ideal of individual liberty" is strongly emphasized in the platform recommendations, whose points further include:

Safeguarding the Constitution and the Supreme Court.

Vigilant protection of Freedom of Religion, Freedom of Speech and Freedom of the Press, and of "the right of the citizen to retain the fruits of his labor as guaranteed in the Constitution."

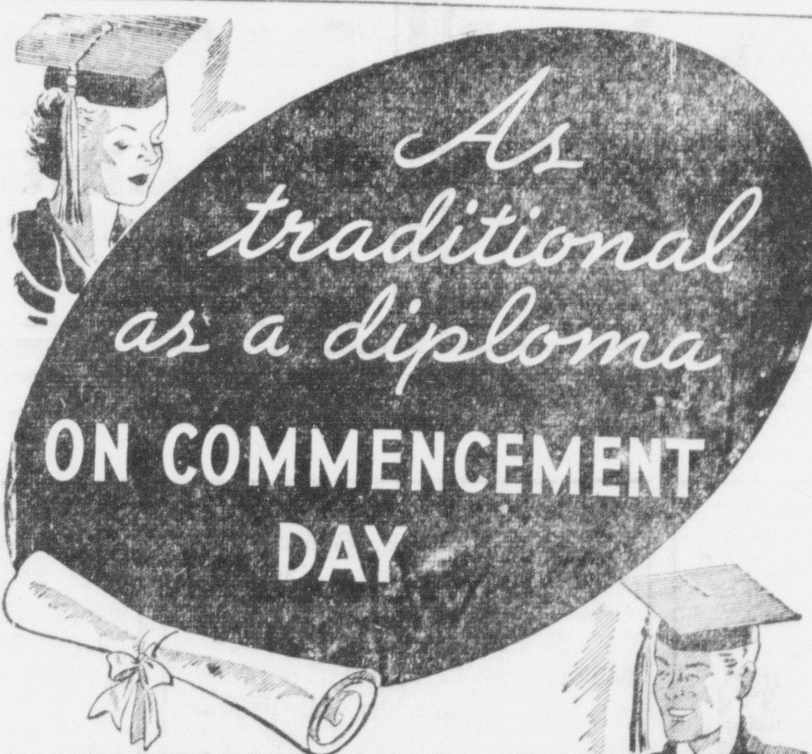

Drastic reduction of public offices and officials who "harass our people and eat out their substance."

Cessation of government espionage and of "spying on the private affairs, communications and business of our people, involving persecution and intimidation."

A return to Civil Service standards, freeing Government employees from political control on the principle that "if this is a government for freemen, its servants should be equally free."

Home Rule, as "a dominant principle in the American ideal of freedom." This involves state control of such responsibilities as social security, child labor and the expenditure of necessary relief funds, including those contributed by the Federal Government.

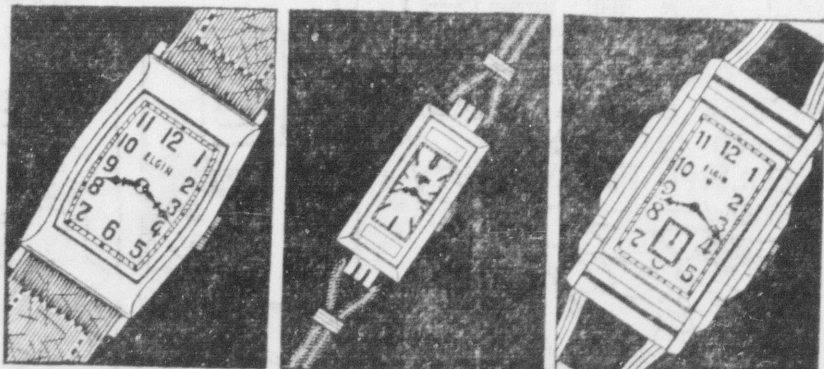

Reaffirmation of the "Constitutional protection of the individual citizen in the right to live his life and conduct his affairs without dictation from Federal Officials."

HORN TO DRIVE CAR AT LANGHORNE, SUNDAY

LANGHORNE, June 5—America's fastest rising young auto racing gentleman, Mr. Ted Horn of Los Angeles, who came east several years ago as just "another one of those western boys," will be privileged to "put on the dog" when he races at Langhorne Speedway Sunday, June 14.

For Horn won second place at Indianapolis, May 30, driving for Harry Hartz, who had earlier selected such ultimate speedway winners as Billy Arnold and Fred Frame to drive his car in 500-mile grand prix classes.

When racing in the east before, Ted was just one of those personable Californians who always did a good job of driving. He broke into the big time at the Hoosier big race last year by driving a Ford farther than any other pilot. Later in a dirt track race, he was injured in a wreck at Lewistown, Pa.

Hartz is always finding gold in rock quarries and has had lots of luck at Indianapolis, when Horn was nominated to drive by the old veteran. Horn's stock went up. Hartz is a good picker; and when Ted rolled into the lead for a while in Indiana several weeks ago, the wisecracks vied for their heads knowingly.

While it is true Lou Meyer, another Langhorne entry, displaced him at the end and Rex May and Babe Stapp, two other entries for June 14, were ahead of him at times, young "Trader" Horn wound up in second spot, which is nothing to be scoffed at in Indianapolis annals.

Were Mr. Alger alive today, he might be busy writing another of his "Fame and Fortune" epics for the youth with Ted Horn as the curly-headed hero.

Also to Promoter Ralph Hankinson, it looks like the "Californians Are Coming, Oh, Ho, Oh, Ho!" as every entry to date is from that sunny western state.

And at the Speedway offices, they are paying "Doc" Mackenzie as it seems the heretofore-ever-present-whiskery boy is nowhere to be found. Paul Revere, in a midjet car, has been assigned to find the Eddington ace.

AL BROWN MATCHED TO BOX JOHNNY LETTO

Al Brown, sensational fighter from the East Side A. C., and winner of the tournament recently held in Camden, has been matched to fight Johnny Letto, Mason A. C., in the all-star boxing show to be held by the St. Ann's Athletic Association, Monday night, in the St. Ann's Arena, Wood and Franklin streets.

This bout, if it meets the approval of the A. A. U., will prove one of the best matches ever seen in this vicinity as both boys possess records to be proud of. Letto, several weeks ago, trounced Jimmy Tygh, Daggert, in a tournament held in the Philadelphia Arena.

Eight straight victories and still going strong.

PECT KEEN RIVALRY FOR CHALLENGE CUP HERE

Strong competition for the Delaware Valley Challenge Cup is expected by the members of the Bristol team that will represent the Bristol Riding Club in this event at the tenth semi-annual Horse Show to be held tomorrow afternoon and Sunday on the Laing Estate, Newport Road. A team representing Princeton, N. J., with a slight edge in points scored over Bristol will give the locals their hardest contest, but with the advantage of home grounds, the Bristol team expects to overcome that lead and win this handsome trophy for the second year in succession.

Other classes that will have large entry lists are the jumping event over the outside course for the beautiful Grandy trophy and the event for the Governor Hoffman Cup. The Corinthian class, always a colorful event, should attract the attention of the spectators as should the saddle horse classes.

The grounds committee has everything in readiness to handle a large crowd. Many temporary stalls have been erected to accommodate the visiting horses. Refreshment booths dot the estate with the opening event list of for one o'clock tomorrow.

May Adopt Code

Easton, June 5—Pennsylvania manufacturers of underwear today were considering the adoption of a code to take the place of the invalidated NRA. If adopted by the entire industry, the code would be administered by the National Underwear Institute. Principal features of the proposed plan are abolition of child labor, minimum wages, with a slight difference between the North and the South, and a forty hour week, excepting during the 16-week peak season when 45 hours would be permitted.

On British Wightman Team

Britain's beauty of the tennis courts, Kay Stammers (above) is being called on again to help halt the American string of victories in the Wightman Cup matches at Wimbledon, England. She is designated No. 2 and will play two singles matches.

RECORD BOXING ENTRY FOR THE OLYMPICS

By E. G. Boy

L. N. S. Staff Correspondent

(Note: This is the third of a series on Germany's preparations for the Olympic games.)

BERLIN, June 5—(INS)—Although entries for the Olympic boxing tournament close officially August 1, 40 nations have already nominated their best amateur fighters—an all-time Olympic record.

At the London Olympic Games in 1908, when boxing was first included in the Olympic program, only five nations competed in all weight classes with a total of 59 fighters, of which Great Britain was the classic land of the noble art of self-defense had entered 39 alone. In 1920, at Antwerp, the number of boxing countries seeking Olympic laurels rose to 10, while 1924 in Paris 28, and 1928 in Amsterdam 39 nations competed. That only 17 nations were represented by their amateur boxers at Los Angeles was merely due to the fact that many national boxing committees could not afford the comparatively high cost involved in sending an expedition to California.

More Entries Likely

Represented among the Olympic boxing teams from 40 nations—a number which will probably be increased by August 1—are, in addition to Germany, the United States, Canada, Great Britain, France, Italy, Argentina and Brazil. A new-comer is tiny Siam which, for the first time in history, is sending athletes to the games. The Japanese envoy in Paris has inquired for full particulars regarding Olympic regulations for boxing and asserted to the Olympic committee that the Siamese fighters are presently undergoing severe training in their homeland in order to appear at Berlin in top shape. Egypt has also informed the International Olympic Boxing Committee that its team for Berlin will be especially strong.

Full Teams

According to Olympic regulations inaugurated by the International Amateur Boxing Federation in 1925, one nation may enter only one fighter for each of the eight classes of weight. Nominations for full teams of eight have so far been received from the following:

What's This? Some Inside-Dope?

Max Schmeling (left) lends an attentive ear to whispered words from Champion Jimmy Braddock who may or may not be pouring words of advice into the Black Uhlan at his Napanach training camp. One thing is sure, Max faces a tough assignment at New York in the person of Joe Louis. The winner will probably face Braddock for the championship.

I WAS FORCED ONE DAY TO JUMP INTO A BED OF QUICKSAND TO SAVE AN ENTRAPPED BOY.

AS MY FEET SLOWLY SANK I THREW THE BOY ONTO FIRM GROUND. THEN TO SAVE MY OWN SKIN I JUMPED OUT OF MY BOOTS.

NEWS OF THE RESCUE REACHED HOME BEFORE I SO THAT I WAS GREETED AND ENGULFED WITH LUSCIOUS FEMINE ENDEARMENTS AND KISSES.
